bully

Bully
He was they said.
He unafraid alone
They, together brave . . . afraid.
A mob of guts
No soul of their own.

He, though bleeding
In defiance glared.
On all sides meeting
All eyes that dared
Carry the hateful rot
That cowardly arms would carry not.

Then as some beat they sprang as one
A charnal savage from within
Then lustful murderous crime was done
And he lay testament to their sin.
But in their midst he still stood
And in their souls he always would.
